

Tips to Create a Great Social Worker-Patient Relationship

Set out clear guidelines when it comes to contact, i.e by providing professional contact details and refrain from handing out personal contact information.

Be professional at all times as this helps maintain appropriate boundaries during social worker-patient sessions.

Limit interactions with patients outside your professional scope.

Remember your goal is to build a professional, therapeutic relationship with your patient, not to impose any personal beliefs or views on them.